

Take Away Three

To the Teacher

The materials that follow are samples from a set of worksheets developed by ESOL Program staff at the Asian Task Force Against Domestic Violence (ATASK), under a 2018 Literacy Lab Grant from First Literacy.¹

This set of worksheets is intended to extend and deepen the learning of students reading Take Away Three, a book by Tana Reiff, an author who has written numerous series of high interest-low level chapter books for adult learners.

Take Away Three tells the story of Rennie, a long-distance truck driver, whose wife Kara is so deeply unhappy with their marriage that she flees to her mother's home with their two children. Kara wants a divorce, while Rennie wants to continue the marriage and promises to change. Their children are caught in the middle.

Take Away Three is written at GLE 2.4. The book is 61 pages long, organized into 14 very short chapters. As written by Tana Reiff, the book was intended for pleasure reading and, therefore, did not include ancillary materials.

ATASK staff designed this set of worksheets for use in ESOL classes with Asian immigrant and refugee women who were domestic violence survivors. This target population had high beginning/low intermediate reading proficiency (SPL 3 on the TABE-English reading test). The materials are appropriate, however, for use with broad ESOL populations.

There are 35 worksheets in the set, with two to five accompanying each chapter of Take Away Three. The exercises:

- Support students in remembering the story-line from one class session to another;
- Provide students with practice in: purposeful, silent reading; using the context to puzzle out unfamiliar words; getting the main idea from text in which some words are unfamiliar; and, using the new vocabulary;
- Support students in relating the story to their own lives; and,
- Create a context for students to communicate their experiences and ideas during small group discussions and in writing.
